WILLIAM'S CHRISTMAS BUST-UP

'Selfish' Prince bans Bond at annual film night, ruining the party for Royals and 100 Palace staff

EXCLUSIVE By Camilla Tominey ROYAL EDITOR

PRINCE WILLIAM was last night accused of selfishly ruining a festive film night for royal staff when he refused to let them watch Bond movie Skyfall because he had already seen it.

Around 100 servants, estate staff and police had been looking forward to sitting down with the Queen and the rest of the Royal Family at Sandringham for the special showing of the 007 blockbuster on Thursday night.

William, who arrived with pregnant wife Kate on Boxing Day after spending Christmas Day with her family the Middletons, said he would prefer to watch Vampire fantasy Twilight. The

Whitehall flunkies pocket £132m in bonuses

By Ted Jeory and Matt Davis

TOP civil servants were enjoying a double celebration last night after sharing a £132million annual bonus pot while being showered with record number of gongs in the New Year's Honours list.

In the depths of a two-year Whitehall pay freeze, some 200,000 Government staff responsible for driving through savage cuts nationwide still collected bonus payments worth £500,000 for every working day last year.

To cap their good fortune, 124 senior civil servants and quangocrats were also rewarded with a raft of CBEs and other honours, almost double the quota given to Britain's Olympic athletes.
